looking forward looking back

We are presenting this edition of our quarterly newsletter as an annual report, providing an overview of our agency's programs and services for the state's most recently completed fiscal year, FY2002 (June 30, 2001-July 1, 2002). During that 12-month period, accomplishments include:

- 306 grants provided
- 42,846 students increased their skills and understanding of the arts through WSAC arts in education programs
- 3,061 teachers were trained in the essential academic learning requirements in the arts
- $3.3 million distributed to organizations and individuals
- 12.5 million individuals benefited directly from WSAC-funded programs
- 26 artworks acquired for the state art collection and placed in public buildings across the state

Other achievements worth mentioning include:

- The opening of new cultural facilities, including the Museum of Arts and Culture in Spokane and Tacoma's International Museum of Glass/International Center for Contemporary Art
- A new partnership with the Office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction (OSPI) to identify best practices and enhance communications and professional development for arts education
- Production and distribution of a Heritage Tour Guide for the I-5 corridor between Seattle and Vancouver WA
- Participation of more than 300 people in the mid-term review of the agency's strategic plan, Energized and Focused for New Realities
- Launching of the five-year Participation Initiative to enhance and assess arts participation in target communities through multi-year project grants and technical assistance

And so much more...

I'm proud of what we accomplished in the past year, and daunted by the challenges of 2003. Mid-way through this current budget year, we are reeling from new statistics: The state is more than $2 billion short of revenue, making Washington one of more than 40 states facing a serious budget dilemma. The Governor's proposed budget for the next biennium closes the budget gap without new taxes. Instead, he proposes deep reductions throughout state government – including cuts of $2.2 million from the WSAC budget - more than 39% of our state funding.

An annual report must be about looking forward as well as looking back. I'm reminded of the Janus, who was known as the Roman god for whom January is named. Janus was a god of beginnings – of crops, doorways, and gates. He was also known as the god of two faces, for he was depicted looking forward and back: he could see who was coming and who was going.

Forward and back, creative investment has always been a key to the development of great civilizations throughout history. Good design is essential in public places and community spaces. The best schools include the arts as part of a complete education. Heritage and culture build civic pride, identity and respect for differences. Tough issues are resolved through creative thinking.

WSAC's mission is to cultivate a thriving environment for creative expression and appreciation of the arts for the benefit of all. Looking ahead and looking back, we are committed to further integrating the arts into the state's priorities – and to efficient, effective public service – to face the challenges ahead.

healthy communities

bainbridge island

Last year Bainbridge Island Arts & Humanities Council (BIAHC) presented a reading by U.S. Poet Laureate Billy Collins attended by 1,325 people from throughout the Puget Sound region. Attendance for poetry readings is seldom this high—even for a poet laureate. Mr. Collins commented that it was the largest indoor audience he has ever had as a solo reader.

Prior to the reading, the poet met with 30 high school creative-writing students. During the informal gathering, he answered questions, discussed the importance of poetry, and shared stories of his own early struggles to find his poetic voice. Nearly 300 students, mainly high school and middle school aged, attended the reading.

By any measure, the combined events were a phenomenal success, promoting cultural tourism on Bainbridge Island, saving BIAHC from what had been a serious budget shortfall, invigorating area writers and readers of all ages, and harnessing the enthusiasm of dozens of community volunteers, organizations, and businesses. The public library, local transit company, and a local bookstore were among the partners.

Prices for the reading were kept low through a grant from the Western States Arts Federation in order to make the reading accessible to as many people as possible. BIAHC also receives operating support from WSAC and the NEA.

The events' reverberations are still being felt in the community.

"We are thrilled by the success of the events and hopeful that the experience has ignited or rekindled the interest in many of the attendees in poetry and thus in future poetry events," said Jennifer Scott, BIAHC's Exhibition magazine editor. As a result of the success of these events, the arts organization is planning to continue to sponsor a nationally known writer each year.

student achievement gaining life skills

“Many students have a vocational, not academic, aptitude,” explains Seattle artist Darwin Nordin. “When they have a chance to pick up a tool, they can visualize success and have pride in their skills.”

Artist Darwin Nordin in the classroom.

Nordin has worked with students in the classroom and in juvenile detention centers for many years. As an Artist in Residence in WSAC’s Arts Education Community Consortia Program, he has brought his unique teaching style to schools in Yakima and Tacoma school districts, to name a few.

He uses the arts as a generative element to learning and enjoys teaching children life skills such as math, history and science through the “back door” of the arts. He strives to present new options, especially for those students that have fallen through the cracks in their schools.

During one of his residency workshops at Carl Sandburg Elementary in Kirkland, students were taught five drawing techniques and were able to use their new-found abilities to address topics in history, technology, biology, comparative anatomy, and physics. Students also worked on writing techniques by creating poems, short prose, and descriptive paragraphs about what they had drawn.

“Without dedicated teachers and artists, these students may never have had the chance to open up to these adaptable skills,” he said.

jobs and revenue

issaquah, everett

The Village Theatre, which operates performing arts venues in Issaquah and Everett, is big business. Employing more than 500 artists a year, from actors to set designers to costumers, the organization has a $6.1 million annual operating budget.

Is this surprising for a non-profit based in a small mining town in the Cascade foothills? Not according to Suzanne Suther, Executive Director of the Issaquah Chamber of Commerce.

“The Village Theatre is our cultural claim to fame,” said Suther. “Not only is it an economic driver for our area, but the theater draws people from all over the Puget Sound region.”

Suther claims the theater is a magnet that allows restaurants to thrive in the city. “We are proud of the theater in the community and what they have done to enhance our economic vitality,” she said.

Executive Producer Robb Hunt said The Village Theatre employs the most weeks of union equity actors in the state; however, under a unique customized contract with the Actors Equity Association, the theater also employs non-union actors.

The theater, which receives an Institutional Support Program grant from WSAC, is committed to family theater. In addition to KidsStage, a program of hands-on learning for ages three to teens, the Village Theater also commissions and produces original musicals. In the last 19 years, 30 new musicals have been born, some of which have gone on to off-Broadway and international success.

The Village Theatre in downtown Issaquah attracts visitors from around the region, sharing its business with the local economy.

economic vitality port townsend

Centrum was founded in 1973 by a partnership among WSAC, Washington State Parks and Recreation Commission and the Office of the Superintendent of Public Instruction. The vision was to create a unique, statewide residential center for the arts and creative education, accessible to all citizens. In the three decades since, Centrum (located at Fort Worden State Park in Port Townsend) has evolved into one of the Northwest's most significant cultural resources, with impressive economic impact.

Centrum's 2002 Fiddle Festival drew thousands of visitors to the Peninsula region.

In addition to being a significant economic engine for the area's tourism industry, Centrum provides living wage jobs both directly and indirectly, and spearheads economic development on the Olympic Peninsula. Centrum's impact on the quality of life is a prime factor for drawing new residents to Jefferson and Clallam counties.

WSAC's $100,000 grant funding generates at least $2.6 million in direct income for rural, distressed Jefferson County. The funds for education programs have leveraged more than an equal matching amount from the corporate/foundation sectors, doubling the effect of state funds, and providing tens of thousands of Washington students with job and life skills. State funds directly enable Centrum to leverage private, matching funds from both in-state and national sources.

Fort Worden State Park is the State Parks system's leading revenue generator. Centrum's programs represent the largest single contribution to that revenue stream.

Celebrating its 30th anniversary in 2003, the vision that created Centrum and Fort Worden State Park continues to yield artistic, cultural and economic dividends that benefit generations of our state's residents.

Art in Public Places Program

total calendar year 2002 funding $1,725,797
(January-December 2002)

The state art collection is the result of the state's Percent for Art Program, managed by WSAC's Art in Public Places. One half of one percent of construction funds in public schools, state agencies, colleges and universities is allocated to art. Projects and artists are listed below.

Because public art projects often span fiscal years, this report details the 284 works added to the State Art Collection in calendar, rather than fiscal, year 2002. For photos of recent projects, visit www.arts.wa.gov.

community partner spokane

Spokane Art School (SAS) has served the Spokane community for 35 years, providing classes and workshops for children and adults, exhibits of contemporary artwork, and special visual arts events.

Although they are the largest art school between Seattle and Minneapolis, they take greater pride in being an integrated part of the community with programs that serve many segments of the population. In order to bring art to community members who may not be able to participate at the school, the organization offers ArtReach. This program takes SAS faculty and curriculum into schools, community centers, libraries, hospitals and other facilities.

“Over the years we’ve touched the lives of many thousands of adults and children, helping them to appreciate and understand visual arts, becoming creative and expressive members of our community,” said Sue Ellen Heflin, SAS Director.

learning through theater seattle

With five extensive programs designed to involve young audiences in theater, Seattle Repertory Theatre’s education department is continually breaking new ground with young people. The program helps students explore theatre in an atmosphere of collaboration, mutual learning, and personal growth.

Seattle Rep has served more than 820,00 students through education programs in the past 40 years. Since 1984, more than 340 young theatre professionals have gone on to careers in non-profit theatres throughout the country and thousands more students have been impacted by their participation in residencies, performances and workshops.

Seattle Repertory Theatre’s Playwriting Residency helps aspiring playwrights realize their dreams.
